

DINING OUT IN DC

The Best Brunches in D.C.

D.C.'s must-try restaurants for next-level avocado toast, bottomless Aperol spritzes, and more

by Tierney Plumb and
Emily Venezky

Updated Feb 26, 2026,
5:14 PM EST

Brunch is sacred in D.C. With so many restaurants offering some variation of it, choosing the right place to catch up with friends, family members, and significant others over a midday meal can be overwhelming. This top-notch list is full of restaurants that are worth the time and investment, whether your tastes lean towards French toast and fried chicken biscuits or well-executed avocado toasts. The bottomless options are also growing across the city, for brunch-goers that like to go big for the midday weekend meal.

Barbouzard ↗

Chef Cédric Maupillier extends his Mediterranean and French menu into weekend mornings with a smoked fish tower ($32), filled with whitefish salad, sable, smoked salmon, trout, and roe; steak and eggs with bordelaise sauce ($48); poached pear baguette French toast ($17); and crepes filled with spinach, mushrooms, ham, bechamel sauce, and Gruyere cheese ($23). Brunch turns in Le Brunch Party, with the lights going down around 2 p.m. as a lit-up live band and dancers bring diners out of their seats. The lively brunch option was a sporadic event earlier this year, but Le Brunch Party is now offered every Sunday and a more relaxed brunch is held on Saturdays as well. Reservations are available on Resy.

📍 1700 K Street Northwest, Washington, District of Columbia 20006, United States ↗

Barbouzard